5,605

copies, the largest paid circulation of any daily paper in this section.

It is now up to Rutland to get rid of its labor dispute.

The veteran horseman Geers was traveling on high gears yesterday.

No wonder that Quincy is nervous, with Restell still unaccounted for.

Can you find "as soon as possible" on the Central Vermont and Grand Trunk calendar?

The idea of Col. Roosevelt going around incognito! Where were the front teeth?

Blase people looking for thrills should go to the summer resorts near Portland, Maine, for during the next two weeks the "enemy" is to try to capture that city. It's only a war game, but interesting, nevertheless.

If Dr. Crippen was innocent of crime, he might have come to the United States as Dr. H. H. Crippen and the woman with him as Mrs. Crippen, instead of coming as "Rev. John Robinson" and son "John." There are apparently some things to explain about his desire to remain unknown.

Summer baseball in Vermont gets another hard knock in Rutland, where the players have run up a big bill for living expenses and are now without a manager, through his sudden call elsewhere. Boardinghouse keepers are taking chances when they "summer" a ball team that isn't well backed financially.

The Central Vermont strike was attended by comparatively little disorder, for which the strikers' union is to be thanked largely, because at the outset the union officials urged the members to refrain from acts of violence and to keep off the streets as much as possible during the course of the dispute. To be sure, there were scattered instances where the strike was responsible for a little violence, but it is probable that strike sympathizers were fully as much to blame as the strikers themselves. On the whole, the conduct of the Central Vermont strikers was very commendable.

THE RAILROAD STRIKE SETTLED.

The contestants in the Grand Trunk and Central Vermont railroad strike have finished their fight and each emerges with a certain measure of honor; but the result is perhaps no different than might have been secured had the parties not gone through two weeks and more of industrial warfare, during which each side lost materially. Had the matter at once been put to arbitration, or, better still, had the disputants been able to come together and settle their own disputes, a great amount of financial loss might have been averted and many criminal acts forefended. At the same time, the railroads might have been transporting their great freight shipments and the employees might have been receiving their regular wages with fairly certain assurance of getting additional wages as soon as the disputes had been settled. This Grand Trunk and Central Vermont trouble simply illustrates an idea which is gaining strength, that strikes and lockouts are the weapons of a disappearing industrial regime and that arbitration in some form or other is to take its rightful place in the settlement of disagreements between employers and employees.

ON BALLINGER'S HEELS AGAIN.

The clamor for the resignation of Richard A. Ballinger as secretary of the interior has taken a new form. Heretofore, the demand has been based on the ground that for the good of the service Ballinger ought to step out, having outlived his usefulness as a public service. That was high ground, but was unsuccessful in stirring this man, who seems to be too self-confident to be moved by hostile criticism. Now comes the demand on another and narrower ground, that of party warfare. It is argued that while not declared in the wrong by the legislative commission, Ballinger has nevertheless become so thoroughly unsatisfactory to the general public that his continuance in the office will serve to alienate many Republicans from supporting the administration, simply because Ballinger is a part of that administration. There is a vast difference between the two grounds for demanding the resignation, the former being far above the latter; yet the latter is much more likely to result in the consummation of the end desired. Party safety, although springing from much lower motives, is a more vital consideration of the present-day standard and will move to action much quicker than the desire for securing the best national service. Therefore, the latest clamor from members of Ballinger's own party may be expected to result in the resignation of that official.

A Mournful Distinction.

"If, in the West, you ask the origin of a successful man, the chances are about even that you will be told he came from Maine or Vermont," President Taft is reported to have said at Bar Harbor. Then the chances are about even that the information was incorrect, for New Hampshire has furnished her full share of the builders of the West.—Concord Monitor.

Well, we won't quarrel about who shall have such an unenviable distinction as that of losing the greatest number of people with brains and character. It is a pathetic honor, this one of being styled poetically the nursery of great men, but, as The Messenger said the other day, it isn't filling. Think what both New Hampshire and Vermont could accomplish for themselves and for New England, if only a fair proportion of this migrating genius stayed at home! It is too much to expect that all men will be content to abide for life in their birthplace, and civilization would soon go out of business if they did. But if Vermont could save to herself only half of her children that now wander away from the parental roof, and if they could produce here something like the same substantial successes many of them achieve abroad, the new Vermont would be realized in a generation.—St. Albans Messenger.

On Chicago.

Dr. Heinrich C. G. Hirsch, the Vienna conductor, said recently that New York's musical taste was much better cultivated than Chicago's.
"A New York and a Chicago girl," he went on, "met at the seashore. In the twilight, while the sky flamed pink in the sunset and the hotel orchestra played Massenet on the terrace, the New York girl said to the Chicago girl:
"Do you like figures?"
"The Chicago girl sighed and answered wistfully:
"No, but I adore clams."—Detroit Free Press.

UNSEEN WORLD IS THE REAL.

Dr. William Hanna Thomson Considers Man as a Creator and the Invisible Man the Master.

Man can and does create. Every great invention existed first in the mind of the inventor. So the great engineer who made the Brooklyn bridge never had to handle one of the materials used in its construction, for every stone, wire and bolt was provided for in that engineer's mind before any part of that tremendous mass of matter could be seen on the earth.

Moreover, this great human creator is as invisible as the divine Creator himself. People are continually saying that they will not believe in a thing till they can see it, thus pinning their faith to the testimony of that one of our senses which makes more mistakes than do all of our other senses put together. When a man six feet high is a mile off, it says that he is only six inches high. The eye can see nothing of the vast microscopic living world which lies within six inches of the eyeball, and so we have to invent a microscope to make up for this serious deficiency. But what would the Russian Witte not have given if he could have telegraphed to St. Petersburg that he had actually seen the Japanese Komura while they were talking about making peace at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, and that he knew just what the courteous Japanese was smiling at and other things of his outside. Every human personality belongs to the real world, the world of the unseen, and cannot be known except as he chooses to reveal himself.

Iceless Refrigerators.

Sometimes the summer house is so situated that it is impossible to secure ice. Under some such circumstances, a device known as an iceless refrigerator may be used to good advantage. A refrigerator of this kind may be purchased ready-made, or may be built by the owner of the house, if he is familiar with the use of tools. The plan of operation in each case is the same. A cupboard containing several shelves is so arranged that it may be lowered into the ground. It is raised by means of a pulley and crank, which works very easily, and when lowered into the cool earth, the contents keep almost as well as when ice is used.—Suburban Life for August.

Knowing. Which one of the two hemispheres will be the mental one will depend altogether on how it has been taught by the invisible thinker, who will begin to teach the left hemisphere if he is right-handed, or the right hemisphere if he is left-handed. He will leave the other hemisphere in each case wholly speechless, or thoughtless, and concerned only with the business of governing the muscles or receiving the bodily sensations of its corresponding side. If brain matter really itself thought, we should have two thinking and two speaking hemispheres—and this the first case of loss by speech by an appetitive clot would disprove.

"By thy words thou shalt be judged." This means that man is to be judged by his own creations, for it is only men who create words. By their words they show what is in them, both intellectually and morally. We have demonstrated that the being who can ask the question, "How?" naturally belongs to the universe. Already he knows what stuff inconceivably distant stars are made of, and the "how" to know that he found in a small glass prism.—Dr. William Hanna Thomson in the August Every-body's.
